FOR A HEALTHY ATX

With the opening of the Dell Seton Medical Center at The University of Texas, our community will soon celebrate a major milestone in the journey to transform health care for everyone in Travis County.

This 21st century hospital will replace the aged Brackenridge and serve all patients regardless of their ability to pay. It will also be a teaching hospital where the students from Dell Medical School — located across the street — will train to become the future of care in our community. Seton Healthcare Family has built the hospital at no expense to taxpayers.

Dell Seton Medical Center will provide top-flight emergency care as the only Level 1 Trauma Center for adults in Central Texas. And it will also offer world-class specialty care, led by doctors on the Dell Medical School faculty.

Community Partnership

Seton has operated Austin's safety net hospital since 1995, but has built upon that community partnership in recent years through collaboration with Central Health (our county's health care district) and Dell Medical School, which opened last year. Together, they're fulfilling the promise of my 10 Goals in 10 Years to transform health care for uninsured and under-insured Travis County residents.

I'm incredibly excited to see where this partnership will take us next. Everyone is welcome to come by on May 13 to celebrate the opening of the Dell Seton Medical Center.
