Thank you for the time, and thank you for your public service. I'm Beth Burns, and I live just west of here in the Cuernavaca neighborhood, [REDACTED]. It's a small, quiet, tight-knit place where we have lake picnics, holiday parades, and where neighbors rat out each other's kids for driving too fast or making out behind the Valero. We're a community, and we're very lucky. My mom lives an eight-minute walk from me. Two-minute drive if I'm feeling lazy.

Right now, we're all in Congressional District 37, represented by Lloyd Doggett. He's local, reachable, accountable. Under this new map, Cuernavaca will be torn into three different districts.

I'll likely be in District 10 with Mr. McCaul. My mom, blocks away from me, in 17 with Mr. Sessions. Our little neighborhood cut up like a bad piece of steak, into rural areas that stretch hours away, represented by people who probably couldn't pronounce Cuernavaca, much less speak to our needs.

Fun fact: District 10, that will be me if this goes through, goes all the way out to Bryan, 2.5 hours east, which recently got a brand new resident. It's home to Camp Bryan, the minimum security prison where the President just had Ghislaine Maxwell moved. So I'll be sharing my new rep with her. Not my mom. But her.

Which brings us back to redistricting, the thing so important that the Governor put it first on the docket before flood mitigation. It's not for good governance. It's not for me or any of our neighbors across this great state. It splits our communities apart and makes us less safe, less prosperous, less heard, so that we're easier to ignore if we think it's bad when child sex offenders are brought to town for more agreeable digs. It's all about one man and his weird choices in friends.

Please don't hurt all of us just to protect him. Stand up for your constituents. Choose Texans over Trump.
