Message:

My name is Evan Hunt. I am running for Congress in Texas's 3rd Congressional District and writing today to voice my opposition to the mid-cycle redistricting actions of this Body.

We all know that the job of a Representative is to advocate for the interests of the people who elected them. Districts are meant to be cohesive communities, with similar interests and needs, so that their Representatives can advocate clearly on their behalf.

Texas's 3rd District is made up of both Collin County and Hunt County which are rapidly growing, and include cities such as Frisco, Plano, McKinney, Allen, Princeton and Greenville. This new map proposes to unnaturally stretch the district east into far more remote areas, thereby expanding it from two to seven counties, and breaking down the common interests within the District. Each of these counties have their own needs and deserve to be represented with as little dilution or distortion as possible.

By pushing for these new maps, this body is clearly more concerned with appeasing a President who is determined to cheat to win, no matter the cost to our democracy and no matter who gets hurt. We all know why this is even a discussion right now - the President is so worried about losing control of Congress in 2026, due to one reckless, failed and unpopular policy after another, that he's exerting his influence over our State Government. This isn't a debate over constitutional concerns - this is political partisan games at their worst. This is about race and power. Minority voters in 3rd District have been gaining ground, organizing, and making their voices heard. And what is this body proposing to do in response?

They want to crack our communities and scatter our voices.

Our democracy should be about making sure every voter, no matter their ethnicity, ZIP code, or skin color - both rural and urban - gets fair representation. I would hope the members of this body would agree.

You can redraw the map, but not the truth. The American voter can see what is being done in this room. We shouldn't let one man in the White House dictate the democratic process in our great State. Cheating is not, and has never been, the way to get ahead in Texas. Let's not forget it.
