Message:

I strongly oppose any redistricting in Texas that's meant to silence or water down Democratic voices. Gerrymandering is just wrong—it's cheating the system. It rigs the map so one party stays in power, and it ends up hurting real communities—especially people of color, younger voters, and working-class families—people like me and my neighbors.

Every vote should matter the same. Everyone deserves the chance to elect leaders who actually understand and represent their needs. But when the lines are drawn with politics in mind instead of fairness, trust in the system breaks down. It makes people feel like their voice doesn't count, and that's not okay.

Texas is diverse and growing fast. Our government should reflect all of us—not just the ones already in power. Redistricting that silences Democratic voters isn't just unfair, it's un-American.

We need a redistricting process that's open, fair, and made for the people—not just the politicians. Representation shouldn't be something you earn by being rich or well-connected. It's a right that belongs to every Texan, period.
