Redistricting Texas in the middle of the decade is ridiculous and not representative of the peoples' opinions or desires. Redistricting at this point could very well lead to more extreme gerrymandering of districts compared to the current situation, leaving the people without representatives that truly listen to them and act in their best interest. There is no benefit to redistricting at this time, and it only serves a political purpose to better one side of the aisle. Even if I were aligned with the party that would be benefitting from this, I would still be writing this comment today, because I believe that it's an inappropriate thing to be doing as it creates a disadvantage for certain groups of people and is only being done to gain an advantage- not to better serve Texans. If you're considering whether or not to allow redistricting to occur, I would ask that you consider the phrase "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you". If you can comprehend that this would limit the voice of the people and have a negative impact across Texas, why allow it to happen? If one day you would like to be heard and respected as a citizen in your local, state and federal government, then vote as if you do not hold your current position. Vote with the understanding that you are a Texan and that your voice and representation could be adversely impacted in the future by your decision today. Vote for the betterment of your constituents, and not for the mere interests of your party or donors. Vote against redistricting because you care about your citizens and all Texans being represented fairly and justly, as you were elected to do so.
