Message:

I oppose redistricting efforts in Texas that are designed to benefit one party over another.

Gerrymandering—no matter who’s doing it—undermines our democracy. It’s a way to manipulate district lines to benefit one party, often at the expense of communities that have historically been underrepresented—especially communities of color, young voters, and working-class Texans. Every vote should matter equally, and every Texan deserves fair representation.

When districts are redrawn with political agendas in mind, it chips away at trust in our institutions and discourages people from getting involved in the civic process. That’s the opposite of what democracy is supposed to be about. Texas is diverse, growing, and full of voices that deserve to be heard. Redistricting shouldn’t be used as a tool to shut those voices out. Representation isn’t something only the powerful should have access to—it’s a right that belongs to everyone.
