Message:
As a proud member of an underserved community and a disabled U.S. veteran, I feel compelled to speak — despite my strong personal reservations about engaging in political matters. My instinct for self-preservation outweighs my silence.

Redistricting Texas to gain five more Republican seats should not proceed without fully considering the immediate and harmful impact it would have on veterans from underserved communities, particularly veterans of color.

From personal experience, I have faced repeated barriers to receiving services and benefits that I earned through my military service. Many of those barriers are reinforced by a lack of representation, accountability, and access — all of which are directly influenced by how district lines are drawn.

Redistricting in a way that dilutes the patriotic vote of people of color is not just politically biased — it’s a betrayal of those who served this country with honor. It threatens to erase voices like mine and silence the issues we’ve fought so hard to bring forward.

To those I’ve contacted recently regarding this matter: Please call me. Let’s not allow this injustice to move forward unnoticed.
