Message:

The President of the United States is not entitled to any representatives from Texas, and Texas should not be working to accommodate the President's wishes. This is not the way America works - the President does not have the right to change a state's representation. To give him this right is to give him power not given to him by the federal or state Constitution.

States are not pawns of the White House.

Governors are not beholden to the White House, but to their state, just as state legislators are beholden to their constituents.

Presently, too few of our legislators as well as our governor are not listening to their constituents. If they were, they would know that their constituents are not interested in redistricting.

But they are interested in fixing the flood devastation and preventing another disaster like it. There is so much to fix in Texas regarding flooding and flood prevention that it is hard to see how there's time in this Special Session for anything else. To ignore this is to ignore the will of the people - and it will not be forgotten.
