Message:

Redistricting for political reasons is wrong. Drawing maps to unfairly advantage any group is wrong. When did the role of political representation become to support the needs of one group instead of the needs of all people? Why is it necessary to redistrict and disenfranchise people? Representation for Texans should be about supporting communities, resolving issues, and making sure the needs of the community are being met. The current desire for redistricting feels more racially and politically drawn than focused on strengthening the community. The people's voices are not being represented. In Texas, we are overwhelmed by issues from natural disasters, flooding, increased crime, lack of resources, lack of infrastructure, layoffs, support for aging communities, food insecurity, and more. The focus of government should be on addressing these areas and not impacting the community to appease political theater.

If the population of Texas is 40% Caucasian and 60% Hispanic, African Americans, and Asians then how do any of the current maps reflect this. If the move is not racially and politically motivated, then why is redrawing at this time, so important? My power lies in my vote. I want to be heard as a constituent. I want the issues of my community to be valued. Redistricting, no matter how the lines are drawn will diminish this. At the end of the day, I request that Texas reject this plan and put the needs of constituents and communities first.
