Message:

I am writing to express deep concern over the recent efforts to redraw voting districts in Texas—again—despite the fact that the current maps were already drawn under Republican leadership and have been widely criticized for blatant gerrymandering.

Texans deserve fair representation, not a rigged political map designed to entrench the power of a single party. These repeated redistricting efforts are not about serving constituents—they are about protecting political control. That is not democracy; that is manipulation.

This is particularly frustrating when so many real issues demand your attention. Our state continues to face serious threats from extreme weather and flooding, our infrastructure is vulnerable, and too many Texans are still struggling with healthcare, education, and affordability. Why isn't your focus on addressing these urgent concerns?

The redrawing of maps does not help everyday Texans. It only benefits politicians who are more concerned about retaining power than earning votes. This undermines public trust and weakens the democratic process.

I urge you to reconsider these redistricting efforts. Instead, please focus your time, energy, and taxpayer dollars on the pressing issues that affect our lives and livelihoods—like ensuring that the next flood doesn't destroy families, homes, schools, and businesses again.

Put Texans first—not politics.
