Message:

I strongly oppose the proposed redistricting plan that appears designed to secure more Republican seats rather than reflect the communities and people who actually live in Texas. Redistricting should be about fair representation, not political advantage.

Texans deserve district lines that honor real communities, not ones carved up to dilute voices and stack the deck. Our neighborhoods, cities, and counties are more than data points or political pawns. They are living, breathing places where people raise families, build businesses, go to school, and vote with the hope that their voices will matter.

This map ignores the true diversity and needs of our state. It fragments communities of color and undermines representation in fast-growing urban and suburban areas. That's not democracy. That's manipulation.

We need a map that reflects us—our identities, our geographies, and our shared interests—not one engineered to predetermine outcomes. I urge the commission to go back to the drawing board and prioritize representation over entrenchment.

Texas belongs to all of us. Draw maps that prove it.
