I'm a Texan, and I'm fed up.

Gerrymandering, especially the kind we've seen repeatedly in this state, is a direct assault on democracy. Redrawing districts to favor politicians and silence voters isn't just shady politics. It's illegal. It's racist. And it's un-American.

Redistricting is supposed to ensure fair representation, not protect incumbents or manipulate outcomes. Yet Texas lawmakers continue to push maps that erase communities, weaken voter power, and lock in partisan control.

This is not just about geography. It's about power. It's about who gets heard and who gets shut out. And I refuse to stay quiet while those in office twist the system to serve themselves.

To every member of the Texas Legislature and redistricting committees: Reject any proposal that silences voters or undermines elections. Draw maps that reflect the people of Texas. If you can't do that, you don't belong in office.

Texas doesn't belong to the powerful. It belongs to all of us. Start acting like it.
