Message:

I am writing today in strong opposition to the current effort to redraw congressional district lines—a process that is not due for another five years. The timing of this hearing, paired with its clear intent to secure political advantage for one party, deeply troubles me as a citizen, a voter, and a longtime Texas resident.

Redistricting should serve the people, not political ambition. Our districts should reflect real communities—neighbors who share schools, roads, and challenges—not be stretched across hundreds of miles in bizarre shapes that dilute our voices and distort our values. It is disheartening to witness this kind of manipulation continue, especially when many of us already feel invisible in the decisions made by those who are supposed to represent us.

I have lived in Texas for years, and I cannot say I have ever truly felt represented. My voice, like so many others, gets lost in districts that were designed not to empower voters but to protect incumbents. This is not democracy. This is not fairness. And this is not what the people of Texas deserve.

I urge you to stop this process and honor the timeline and integrity of our democratic institutions. Do not redraw the lines for political gain—redraw them, when the time comes, to reflect and respect the people of Texas.
