Message:

Early redistricting in Texas is a blatant abuse of power and a direct assault on democratic principles. Redistricting is meant to occur once every ten years following the Census to reflect population changes fairly—not to serve as a political weapon whenever one party seeks to entrench its power. Circumventing that process erodes public trust, distorts representation, and silences voters. It manipulates district lines not to serve communities, but to divide and weaken them for partisan gain—especially communities of color who already face systemic barriers to representation. This kind of manipulation is not just undemocratic; it’s immoral. It undermines the fundamental idea that voters should choose their representatives, not the other way around.
