Message:

I am writing to express my concern about the redistricting and subsequent gerrymandering of Texas. I walk the streets of Texas far more than anyone in the Texas Congress does. I interact with real Texans every day. Republicans are very rapidly becoming a minority, and you know it. Falsely inflating the relevance of Republicans in a deeply purple state - that has been purple for years now - is a move only cowards make. If you do this, you will further cement yourselves in history as some of the weakest, bootlicking, corrupt politicians in modern-day America. I am ashamed, and in my gut, I feel that none of you are Texans. You know nothing about us. You are strangers grifting off of our tax dollars, and you are power hungry. I know that corruption runs deep in this country. Heck, that's all we're running on these days. But you shouldn't be so concerned about the dwindling Republican support. You should be concerned about the dwindling respect of politicians as a whole. You aren't mouthpieces for your constituents, you're mouthpieces for corporations who are ruining Texas in quite literally every sector. If Watergate took place today, or the equivalent of Watergate at a state level, every single one of you in office would look the other way. You would've have dug deeper, you would've have subpoenaed the tapes, and you certainly would've have voted to impeach. Because you're cowards. You're in it for the money. Not a single one of you actually respects the Texas constitution, nor the people it's meant to respect. And you know that we the people know it. That's why you're making the move to redistrict, so that you don't lose your seat. Texans are done with you. Don't hold us hostage.
