Hello,

Although from Wisconsin I find the attempt to redistrict interesting because we have had this issue in my state.

And I'm baffled (as well as saddened and disheartened) that this would happen, as it currently is in TX, purely to gain "red seats."

That is why it is being done, correct? Trump demanded it and of course to stay in his "good graces" you will blatantly attempt to do this - a move that clearly shows that if you can't win honestly, you will rig it so you will win, right?

Add. Five. Red. Districts.

I totally understand it is appropriate to add districts because population grew (assume it did according to the 2020 census?) but to blatantly say you are specifically creating "red" districts is unconscionable and should be unconstitutional.

Trump can't seem to keep his narrative straight. First he wants to leave everything up to the states, correct? The federal government should not interfere. The states know best, blah, blah, blah. Then he turns around and ORDERS Texas to add more red districts, correct? And, wow, you folks just said how high when he told you to jump.

It appears that some do not realize, although it is playing out in real time, that soon, if all MAGA just do as the dear leader says, there will be no need for governors, or senators, or mayors - or at least no need for them to have a mind of their own because under a dictatorship, something Trump claimed to do on day one, you will all become irrelevant under a dictatorship; you will not be allowed to think for yourselves, just follow the leader.

Project 2025 is moving along well and by following the orders of Trump, your state is simply helping to destroy our democratic republic. I can only hope that this vile display of partisanship will turn even more people off and it will backfire.

Thank you for allowing me to share my thoughts with you. I'm disappointed in Texas. Wish you would "play fair."

Randy
