Gerrymandering is an indefensible act that highlights the depth of the corruption of our government. If a party in power knows their policies are so toxic, that they have to redraw maps to further silence voters (of whom the officials in power are not listening to anyway.) Then you have reached a new low. Ok, that references previous gerrymandering efforts. But wait, there is more. What if this gerrymander occurs out of cycle at the behest of a criminal in office in Washington? What if an unpopular (remember "did not vote" won the last election in Texas,) criminal president snaps his fingers, and his minions go groveling to quickly do the bidding of the one demanding this egregious subversion of the will of Texas voters? Well, new low doesn't quite cut it anymore. I am disgusted at Governor Abbott's groveling before this latest assault on democracy and at least we can know for fact that Greg Abbott will not stand up for Texas and will do what he can to silence the voters in Texas.

Finally, I strongly oppose trying to punish the brave democrats who left the state at risk and expense to themselves. I will be knocking doors and donating against you next election.

Regards,

Robin Sharpton
