Please don't use partisan gerrymandering. It dilutes people's voices. My voice is not the same as that of someone in a district that is evenly split between parties. With gerrymandering, only one group is heard, but we should all have equal representation. I'm affected more by the law than people who aren't part of minority groups, and yet my vote is getting diluted by people who want to put me in harms' way. Gerrymandering shouldn't be used for either party, and I'm not saying it should be used for my party, either; but I am saying that I'm especially likely to get harmed by gerrymandering, as a part of a hated minority group in a state that spreads propaganda about me. If you use gerrymandering as a way of diluting my vote, then you are admitting that you can't win an election without rigging it, so people who use that strategy know that their goals are wrong and not what the majority wants, but they want to keep their power rather than doing what's right for the people. I'm a person, I have a right to vote, and I have a right for my vote to be heard rather than diluted. The legislative districts should be drawn randomly, with each district having about the same amount of people, with no regard for political parties. There shouldn't be a winner-takes-all system of the electoral college; that also dilutes our votes, and it isn't okay, and everyone knows that it isn't okay. I deserve equal representation. Thank you for reading.
