Message:

I strongly oppose using redistricting for political advantage by any party. Redrawing maps mid-decade, outside the regular census cycle, is an unnecessary overreach that undermines the integrity of our representative system.

This country wasn't built on backroom deals or engineered wins. It was built on the idea that voters choose their leaders, not that political elites redraw the lines to stay in power.

Redistricting should follow clear, neutral criteria of compactness, equal population, respect for communities, and minimal disruption. It should not be driven by party interests or incumbent protection.

I urge you to consider establishing an independent redistricting commission to take politics out of the process. This would strengthen trust in our elections and reflect the will of the people rather than the ambitions of a few.

Keep redistricting fair, transparent, and accountable, and keep power where it belongs, with the people.
