Message:

As a concerned citizen, I strongly oppose the decision to schedule congressional redistricting earlier than necessary, especially when the clear intent appears to be partisan gerrymandering to preserve political power ahead of the upcoming midterm elections.

Redistricting should be a transparent, fair, and data-driven process—not a political tool used to manipulate electoral outcomes. Rushing the redistricting process undermines public trust in our democracy, disenfranchises voters, and weakens the principle of fair representation. Every citizen, regardless of political affiliation, deserves to have their vote count equally and their community fairly represented.

Efforts to redraw district lines early for political gain are not only unethical—they are anti-democratic. I urge lawmakers to uphold the integrity of the redistricting process by ensuring it is conducted openly, with public input, and without partisan interference. Voters should choose their representatives, not the other way around.

Protecting democracy requires putting country before party. I call on all elected officials to reject gerrymandering and commit to fair maps that reflect the will of the people.

Thank you for your time and consideration,

Erin Byrne
