Message:

The district of El Paso, which is one being considered for redistricting, is comprised of hard-working, blue collar laborers, of Mexican and Mexican-American families with a generational commitment to striving for a better quality of life. It simply isn't built to be sustained by a Republican-leaning governance, and many of those who are in support of the redistricting know this well. Redistricting Texan districts like El Paso leaves Brown and Black constituents disenfranchised and unable to thoroughly support candidates who truly have their best interests in mind. This is a blatant attempt for a Republic power grab and congressional grip that'll leave districts like El Paso severely underrepresented and underserved. Already positioned to be excluded from the statewide political narrative because of its remote distance from the rest of major Texan cities, El Paso thrives under a governance that supports communities, builds community-level assistance programs, and understands the esoteric social needs of a bicultural, binational and transnational economy. Voters in El Paso will remember who turned their backs on them today and will demonstrate their frustrations at the ballot box. Do right by El Pasoans.
