I think redistricting is a great start to dismantle the stronghold that corrupt politicians have in certain areas. Their policies fail and keep inner cities, and the areas around, poor, low educated, and stuck in poverty.

When my kids can tell if an area we drive through is republican or democrat run just by the conditions of the streets and buildings, there is a problem. My hope is that the redistricting maps are drawn to allow new blood to come in and revitalize these communities and let the people in these neighborhoods see that voting for the same failed policies is what turns their neighborhoods into disarray. Change is good.
