I deeply about what happens in the 18th and I know that leadership in one district can have ripple effects across our entire city and state. As a young Black woman, a Houstonian, and someone who's committed to a career to advancing equity, I pay attention to whose values are shaping our communities.

I'm against what's happening in the 18th because it's not just about political power, it's about representation, accountability, and progress. I've seen firsthand, in my work across education and business operations, how disconnected leadership can slow down or block the very opportunities people in our communities need, especially Black and Brown families, small businesses, and young professionals trying to build generational wealth.

I believe in fresh leadership that reflects the lived experiences and bold vision necessary to move our communities forward, not just maintaining the status quo, but 18th hasn't had any leadership. There has been no representation in the 18th for months and now redistricting? No! That should not be focus, it should be for the more the 800,000 who current don't have a voice because Houston deserves better. No to redistricting!
