"When you do what you've always done, you keep on getting what you've always got."

For decades, committees like this one have been responsible for drawing electoral district maps, and time and again, they've been challenged for violating civil rights. The current example is this mid-decade redistricting effort, driven by a desire to fulfill a president's wish, rather than serving the people's interests. It's clear that the current system isn't working. I urge you to consider a different approach. Passing a constitutional amendment to transfer redistricting authority to an independent, nonpartisan citizens' committee would be a significant step towards fairness and equity. It's time for change. Let's put the power to draw district maps in the hands of the people, not politicians. #CitizensnotPoliticians @unrigTexas @TexansGerry
