Message:

I was not born in Texas, I moved here after 21 yrs in Wisconsin. I grew up middle classed in a neighborhood with all races and schools that were incredibly diverse. The first thing I noticed in moving to Texas, and was very disturbed by, was the clear segregation. I moved here with my 1 year old who is mixed and a spouse who was asian. I am white so I can't claim to understand the daily struggle of being brown in Texas but I can claim to understand the fear. The fear that because those that lead this state refuse to denounce racism from the nations leader, my children and now hispanic spouse are in danger everyday. In America. That is such a strange reality to acknowledge. I know this is because of the nations president because I never felt the fear previously. Not even when the segregation was so clear over 20 years ago. I only felt this fear starting in 2016. Why does this matter right now? It matters because this unfortunate leader has been clear that Texas' redistricting is to "gain seats". We all can see this and it is quite revolting to watch happening but he literally said it out loud. 24 seats, that's how many districts should be represented by THOSE THAT UNDERSTAND THE DAILY STRUGGLE OF BEING BROWN IN TEXAS to advocate for ALL Texans. Not by white men who have had privelage from birth. Who have never had to fear what danger your skin color can put you in, in Texas. I am asking for any of you, besides those already speaking out against this redistricting, to stop this gerrymamdering. Public servants should service the public.
