To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing as a concerned Texan and a firm believer in fair representation to express my strong opposition to the recent efforts to redraw congressional district maps in a way that would disproportionately benefit one political party—specifically, to gain more congressional seats for Republicans.

Redistricting should be about ensuring equal representation for all Texans, not about manipulating boundaries to secure political advantage. Gerrymandering—whether done by Republicans or Democrats—undermines the democratic process by diluting the voting power of certain communities, particularly communities of color and urban populations. It erodes public trust in government and contributes to the polarization and dysfunction we see in politics today.

Texas is a diverse and growing state, and our districts should reflect that diversity. Maps should be drawn transparently and based on input from a wide range of voices—not behind closed doors to serve partisan interests. I urge you to support the establishment of an independent redistricting commission, one that puts voters before politicians and ensures that every Texan's vote counts equally.

We deserve a government that works for all of us, not just for those in power. Please do the right thing for our democracy and reject any redistricting plans that prioritize political gain over fair representation.
