To Whom It May Concern,

I write to you today in deep frustration and disappointment regarding the blatant and politically motivated redistricting efforts being carried out under the influence of Donald Trump—a convicted felon who has repeatedly shown contempt for the truth, for justice, and for our Constitution.

The people of Texas deserve better than this charade. These maps should not be reviewed for another five years. Any premature remapping will not only waste millions of taxpayer dollars, it will disrupt and harm communities across the state and, most disturbingly, further suppress the voices of voters—especially those from historically marginalized communities.

I might ask you—what are you afraid of? Why are you bowing to the demands of a man who refuses to release promised documents such as those related to Jeffrey Epstein, clearly in an effort to protect himself and his inner circle? Why are you following the lead of someone convicted of crimes, instead of standing for the people of Texas?

You are not honoring your oath to the Constitution. You are not acting in defense of democracy. And people are starting to see through it. We see you- we know what you are doing!

Republicans I know—friends of mine—have expressed shame, remorse, and regret for ever believing in the party they once trusted. Are you yet ashamed? You should be.

What happened on Saturday at the University of Houston was an assault on civic participation. Citizens showed up in good faith to testify—only to find the doors locked. So many who waited patiently were turned away without a voice. I, too, attempted to sign up to testify within the proper timeframe, only to find that the link was broken. That is not what democracy looks like. That is what voter suppression and government manipulation look like.

What are we doing? This is not what America was built on. This is not who we are supposed to be.

History will remember these failures. What legacy will you leave when you are gone? One of courage and principle—or one of cowardice and complicity?

Right now, you are standing on the wrong side of history. You are turning your back on the Constitution and on the rights of your fellow Americans.

You still have a choice. Choose justice. Choose the people. Choose democracy. We're watching. And we will not forget. Shame on you!

Sincerely,
Sarah Robert
